Teaser	You currently have German citizenship, got married abroad and would like to have your marriage notarized in Germany? You can also have your marriage notarized if you do not have German citizenship.
Volltext	If you got married abroad and one of you has German citizenship, you can have the marriage certified in Germany. The date of the application is decisive for the possession of German citizenship. Stateless persons, homeless foreigners or foreign refugees with habitual residence in Germany can also submit an application for subsequent certification of the marriage. The marriage must be concluded in accordance with the formal requirements applicable in the country in which you got married. German law must not stand in the way of the marriage. You can also have your marriage subsequently certified if you both do not have German citizenship and were married in Germany before an authorized person of a government of the state to which one of you belongs. The registry office of your place of residence or the place where you last lived or the place of your habitual residence is responsible for the subsequent certification. If your habitual residence is not in Germany, the registry office I in Berlin is responsible for the subsequent certification. There is no obligation for subsequent notarization. However, subsequent notarization has advantages: -

Modul

Sachverhalt

You can have a marriage certificate issued at any time (e.g. if your foreign certificate is lost). - You have a German certificate as proof of your marriage.
