Teaser	Residential property is the ownership of an apartment in conjunction with the co-ownership share of the common property.
Volltext	Condominium ownership is the ownership (special property; also called spatial ownership) of an apartment in connection with the co-ownership share of the common property (land and the building, insofar as they are not in the special property or in the property of a third party). If you want to establish residential property, it is necessary to enter it in the land register. For this purpose, housing land registers are created. Before this can be done, however, you must first create the conditions for condominium ownership. This can be done in two ways:

Sachverhalt

- If you are a co-owner of a property, a notarized partition agreement of all co-owners in accordance with § 3 WEG is required for this. In doing so, you agree with all co-owners and grant each other condominium ownership by dividing. Each of you then receives the ownership (special property; also called room ownership) of a certain apartment in a building already built or to be built on the property.
- You can make a division according to § 8 WEG by means of a notarized declaration if you are the sole owner of a property. With the declaration you make to the land registry office, you divide the ownership of the property (so-called declaration of division). You associate each share with the ownership (special property; also called room ownership) of an already existing or future apartment. In addition, you assign each share a fraction of the co-ownership share of the property.
- The entry in the land register is carried out by creating the housing land registers by the responsible land registry office. This means that a separate, special land register sheet is created for each apartment. As a result, a condominium can be sold like any other property, encumbered with liens or other rights or inherited. The previous land register sheet for the property will be closed.
