Volltext	In Saxony, dental training includes a dental examination before the examination board of the Saxony State Directorate for the Dental Examination (ZÄP) at the universities of Leipzig and Dresden. Proof of passing the examination is a prerequisite for a licence to practise as a dentist. Dental training comprises a ten-semester course of study in dentistry (standard period of study including examination period: ten semesters and six months) at an academic university, training in first aid, one month's nursing service, a four-week clinical traineeship and the dental examination. The dental examination consists of • the first section of the dental examination (Z1), • the second section of the dental examination (Z2) and • the third section of the dental examination (Z3). They apply for authorisation for each section of the dental examination individually. The examinations are taken before a state examination commission (examination board). The Saxon State Examination Office for Academic Health Professions appoints chairpersons, members and their deputies. The State Examination Office can also send representatives to the examinations.
