The handling of weapons or ammunition is regulated by the Federal Weapons Act and generally requires a licence. Unauthorised handling of weapons is a criminal offence or - in certain cases - at least an administrative offence.

You need a "small firearms licence" if you want to carry an alarm weapon, an irritant weapon or a signal weapon with PTB marking. According to the legal definition, the term "carrying" refers to the exercise of actual force outside your own home, business premises, your own pacified property or a shooting range.

In contrast to the "large" firearms licence, you do not have to prove your expertise or need for the small firearms licence and you do not have to take out special liability insurance.

Find out about the relevant regulations before purchasing a firearm and contact the relevant authority to clarify any questions relating to firearms
