Sachverhalt

Volltext

If you, as a building owner, wish to use structural facilities differently than before, you need a building permit unless the facility does not require a permit.

A change in the use of a building is deemed to have occurred if the new use differs from the previous use in such a way that it is subject to different legal requirements. The legal changes can be in the area of building regulations or construction planning in particular.

In the simplified approval procedure, compliance with the following regulations is checked for the change of use:

- admissibility of the building structures under building planning law
- Deviations applied for
- other requirements under public law, insofar as the building permit eliminates or replaces a decision under other public law regulations or the decision is assigned to the lower building supervisory authority by specialist law (compliance with the requirements for stability, fire, noise, heat and vibration protection must be verified by means of structural engineering evidence. This must be available at the start of construction, checked by the building authorities if necessary).

As the client, you therefore bear a great deal of responsibility. The restriction of the building authority inspection does not release you from the obligation to comply with the requirements placed on installations by public law. Otherwise, the new use may be prohibited.
