Volltext	Vertebrate animals of specially protected species are subject to mandatory notification. The keeper must notify the competent authority in writing of the number of animals immediately after the start of keeping and, following the notification of the number of animals, of any additions or disposals (changes to the number of animals) and their identification. A change of location must also be reported immediately. Species under special protection include the majority of exotic animal species, such as monkeys, parrot birds, tortoises, giant snakes, lizard species such as day geckos and chameleons, but also numerous native species and all European bird species. It is possible to check whether certain species are designated as specially protected, e.g. at the Scientific Information System for International Species Conservation (WISIA) or in the annexes to the Federal Species Protection Ordinance. https://www.wisia.de/ https://www.lung.mv-regierung.de/fachinformationen/natur-und-landschaft/artenschutz/ https://www.wisia.de/ https://www.lung.mv-regierung.de/fachinformationen/natur-und-landschaft/artenschutz/
Erforderliche Unterlagen	For each individual specimen kept, the keeper must provide the competent authority with the following
