depository are automatically informed of the death and the entry. Probate courts can also check the register of wills to see whether a disposition of property upon death is in official safekeeping.

The contents of dispositions of property upon death are not shown in the register of wills, but are kept locked away at the local court.

You do not have to take any special action to register in the register of wills. The depositories are legally obliged to register. However, this does not apply to private wills that are not kept officially. These cannot be recorded in the Central Register of Wills.

Erforderliche Unterlagen

- the disposition of property upon death to be deposited (e.g. will)
- birth certificate
- identity card

Voraussetzungen

- Request by the testator to the local court that his disposition of property upon death be taken into special official custody.

Kosten

There is a fee of EUR 75.00 for depositing a will with the court.

The fee charged by the Federal Chamber of Notaries for registration in the Central Register of Wills is EUR 12.50. However, if the fee is charged directly by the register authority from the party liable for the costs, it amounts to EUR 15.50.

Verfahrensablauf

If you wish to make a disposition of property upon death yourself, we recommend that you proceed as follows:

- Please contact the probate court responsible for you or a notary and make an appointment.
- In addition to the disposition of property upon death, bring your birth certificate and identity card with you to the appointment.
- Once you have deposited your will, you will receive a certificate of deposit as proof that it has been deposited.
- You will later receive an invoice for court costs.

Hinweise	In certain cases, special official safekeeping is also arranged by a third party if you so wish, for example when drawing up a notarized will or contract of inheritance. The notary will then ensure that the document is taken into special official safekeeping.
Rechtsbehelf	If official safe custody is refused, the judicial officer of the local court shall decide by order. The testator requesting custody may lodge an appeal against the refusal for a limited period of time. If a clerk was functionally responsible under state law instead of the judicial officer, a reminder must be lodged.
