Sachverhalt

As an impaired person (so-called damaged), you will receive medical treatment for damage to health that has been recognized as a result of damage or caused by a recognized consequence of damage. The purpose of the healing treatment is:

- to eliminate or improve health disorders or impairment of occupational or working capacity caused by them,
- to reduce suffering,
- to avoid, overcome, reduce or prevent the need for long-term care,
- remedy physical ailments
- facilitate the consequences of injury
- or to enable the widest possible participation in life in society.

As a severely injured person, you will also receive medical treatment for health disorders that are not recognized as a result of damage. However, this comprehensive claim does not apply if you have corresponding claims against another social security institution (e.B. health insurance). Restrictions also apply if you exceed certain income limits.

Furthermore, you can receive medical treatment services. However, your entitlement to medical treatment is excluded if you already have a corresponding claim against another social security institution (e.B. health insurance). Restrictions also apply to certain income limits.

Medical and medical treatment services are generally provided in kind.

Rechtsbehelf

Kurztext

- Application in the context of social compensation law
- Damaged persons are entitled to medical treatment for recognised health disorders. It is also granted to severely injured persons for non-dependent suffering, if and insofar as it is not otherwise ensured (e.B. by membership in the statutory health insurance); under the same conditions, the family members and carers of the severely disabled as well as all surviving dependents may seek medical treatment.
- The type and scope of benefits generally correspond to those of statutory health insurance.
- The local supply authorities in the individual countries are responsible for the implementation.

disabled persons (so-called injured) receive medical treatment for health damage that

- recognised as a result of injury, or
- have been caused by a recognised consequence of damage.

Severely injured persons also receive medical treatment for health disorders that are not recognized as a result of damage, unless there are special grounds for exclusion.
