Teaser	According to the German Distance Learning Protection Act (Fernunterrichtsschutzgesetz - Fern-USG), distance learning courses require approval by the State Central Office for Distance Learning. A contract for a non-approved course is null and void.
Volltext	The State Central Agency for Distance Learning (ZFU) based in Cologne • decides on the approval or refusal of approval of all distance learning courses requiring approval. Without approval, distance learning courses within the meaning of the law may not be marketed or advertised in Germany, • reviews the continued existence of the approval requirements for distance learning courses, generally every three years, • decides on the approval of significant changes to approved distance learning courses, • registers distance learning courses that do not require approval (so-called "hobby courses", which are used exclusively for leisure activities). The ZFU must be notified of the distribution of these courses. It is up to the ZFU to decide whether the course is actually a "hobby course". The distance learning contracts for such distance learning courses are also subject to the Fern-USG and are checked by the ZFU.

If the final approval of the distance learning course is preceded by provisional approval, this fee increases to 200% of the sales price. The minimum fee for admission is EUR 1050.00. Reduced admission fees are payable for distance learning courses with a low sales price (less than EUR 250).
