Teaser	If you wish to use a document from a court or notary abroad, it may have to be legalized. It may have to be pre-certified by the competent German authority.
Volltext	German public documents are generally only recognized abroad if their authenticity has been confirmed by the competent representation of the country concerned in Germany (legalization). The representations of foreign countries generally require the German documents to be legalized by the competent German authorities beforehand. In Bavaria, the president of the regional court in whose district the document was drawn up is responsible for the preliminary legalization of documents from the area of ordinary jurisdiction, including notaries. As part of the legalization procedure for foreign representations, the regional courts certify, for example, German judgments, decisions, court documents, notarial deeds and translations. There are international agreements according to which certain documents are exempt from legalization.
Erforderliche Unterlagen	• Document from the court or notary in the original
Voraussetzungen	You would like to use a court or notarial deed abroad and need a preliminary certification for legalization.
Kosten	There are framework fees for certification as part of a legalization procedure. A fee of EUR 25.00 is to be expected for each document.
